PRES. NICHOLS AND DARTMOUTH

COLLEGE. Quite frequently it is the case that the retirement of college presidents is occasioned by reason of the advanced age of the officials or by reason of the passing of their usefulness to the institutions. So it comes with great surprise to the general public when a college president sees fit to resign when still a young man and apparently in the height of success in his position. Such a case is furnished by Dr. Ernest Fox Nichols, head of Dartmouth college, who has just tendered his resignation. Dr. Nichels is still young in years; moreover, it is certain that the institution at Hanover has been making marked gains in student registration during the period of his presidency and, we presume, along other lines not so open to the casual notice of the public. Hence another compelling reason must be sought for in accounting for the resignation of President Nichols. Undoubtedly the reason lies in the fact that his natural inclination is toward laboratory research along the line of physics rather than toward administration work which demands so much time that he cannot devote himself at all to that branch in which he gained distinction before accepting his present position. By reason of his transfer to Yale university as a professor, Dr. Nichols will find bimself in a position to resume his research work under favorable conditions and without the distractions which come to the executive head of a large institution. His success in that field of endeavor prior to
